

George Zografakis is the Founder and CEO of Egnatia Aviation, one of the leading pilot training schools in Greece and Europe, based at the first private General Aviation Airport "Lydia" in Amygdaleona, Kavala.

A graduate of Control Data Institute in Leeds, UK, with studies in Computer Programming and Analysis, a long experience in IT, sales, promotion, and management. He also has long managerial experience at ARAMARK Ltd in the UK and USA.

Egnatia Aviation originated from the United Kingdom to Greece with the aim of promoting general aviation services, such as pilot training, aircraft maintenance, the development of aviation culture and air tourism in our country. It has contributed to the stay of Greek student-pilots in Greece and to the attraction of foreign students from 62 different countries. In addition, he established for the first time in Greece the innovative BS in Aviation Management with Pilot Studies program in collaboration with the American College of Thessaloniki, Anatolia.

The new private airport "Lydia" creates a general aviation hub and contributes dynamically to the development of air tourism and leisure activities in the region, aiming at a dynamic and robust tourist sector.
